UBT is the oldest university in Albania, founded on November 1, 1951. Initially, it functioned as the Higher State Institute of Agriculture and further during the history of its operation, it gained the status as the Agricultural University of Tirana. UBT carefully preserves its academic values, as it is ambitious in its development and research strategies, the continuous qualification of its staff, the increase of international cooperation and the institutionalization of relations with business.

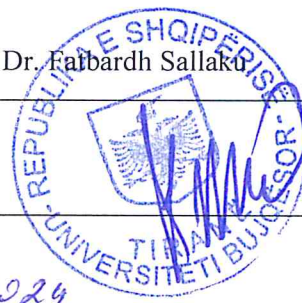

UBT is the first HEI in Albania which undergo the accreditation process in 2006 and the next accreditation process in 2021. In the last accreditation process it was granted with 6 years accreditation.

UBT is a unique center of higher education in Albania considering the fields of study it covers. The focus of its activity is education, scientific research and knowledge transfer. The latter is realized through training activities, consultancy, and extension services in the field of agriculture and food. As the largest center of education and research in the field of agriculture and food, UBT has been at the forefront of creating links between science and production. These connections have been materialized through dozens of agreements signed by public actors and in particular with the Albanian business community.
